THE VAIŚEŚIKASŪTRA AS REFERRED TO BY BHĀVAVIVEKA
IN HIS TARKAJVĀLĀ

Masaaki HATTORI, Kyoto

In the seventh chapter of his Madhyamakahr̥daya-kārikā (abbrev. MH), the author Bhāvaviveka makes a critical examination of the Vaiśeṣika doctrines. Unfortunately this chapter is missing in the Sanskrit manuscripts of MH which was in the hands of the late Professor V.V. Gokhale and is now kept by Professor S. Bahulkar. However, the Tibetan Bstan-'gyur furnishes us with MH and also Bhāvaviveka's auto-commentary on it, namely, the Tarkajvālā (TJ). In the introductory portion of the seventh chapter of TJ, a good number of sūtras are found quoted from a Vaiśeṣika source. The Vaiśeṣika-sūtra (VS) are handed down to us in three forms: (1) *VS*₁ with Candrānanda's vṛtti, (2) *VS*₂ with Vādīndra's vyākhyā, and (3) *VS*₃ with Śāṅkaramiśra's Upaskāra. The sūtrapāṭhas given in them differ from each other considerably. As will be shown below, the sūtras quoted in TJ are close to those given in *VS*₁. I will present below the Tibetan text of the introductory portion of TJ, Chapter VII, with the Sanskrit text of the quoted sūtras in footnotes.

Tibetan text

For this text I have collated the following two editions:

- D: sDe-dge edition, reprinted in the Sde dge Tibetan Tripiṭaka, Bstan ḥgyur, preserved at the Faculty of Letters, University of Tokyo, Dbu ma 3 (Dsa), Tokyo: Sekai Seiten Kankōkyōkai, 1977, pp. 121-122, fol. 242a.7-244a.6
- P: Peking edition, reprinted in the Tibetan Tripiṭaka, ed. D.T. Suzuki, Vol. 96 (Dbu-ma, Dsa), Tokyo-Kyoto 1957, pp. 111-112, fol. 272b.3-274b.6

The Sanskrit text of the sūtras in footnotes are given in accordance with the sūtrapāṭhas presented in:

Vaiśeṣikasūtra of Kaṇāda, with the Commentary of Candrānanda, ed. Muni Jambuvijayaji, Baroda: Oriental Institute, 1961 (GOS 136).

Remarks on the quotation of sūtras

In D243a.3/P273a.8, the term 'spyi' (= sāmānya) is used instead of 'yod pa ñid' (= sattā). This point is discussed in Tachikawa's paper in the present volume.

In D243a.6/P273b.7 the text runs: las la ni spyi med do (There is no sāmānya in karman). This does not make sense. The term °sādhyam in VS 1.1.10 is mistaken for °sāmānyam in the manuscript used for translation or by the translator.

Following the citation of VS, 1.1.17 (D243a.7/P273b.5), which states that a dravya is a cause common to dravya, guṇa and karman, the Tibetan text states that a guṇa is a cause of saṃyoga and vibhāga. As a matter of fact this is wrong. The sūtra 1.1.18 (tathā guṇaḥ) and 1.1.19 (saṃyoga-vibhāgānām [kāraṇam] karma) are confused.

It has been mentioned above that the sūtrapāṭhas of the quotation in TJ is close to those found in *VS*₁. D243a.6/P273b.3: rdzas ni ... mi 'gal lo exactly coincide with the reading given in *VS*₁: kāryāvirodhi dravyam kāraṇāvirodhi ca, and not with *VS*₃: na dravyam kāryam kāraṇam ca bādhati (1.1.12).

In D243b.2-3/P273b.8-274a.1, VS, 2.2.6 which gives a definition of kāla is quoted. Both *VS*₂ and *VS*₃ present a different reading: aparasminn aparam ... iti kālalingam. The phrase 'aparasminn param' means the reversal of the concepts of 'para' and 'apara'. We form the concept of 'para' (remote) in regard to an old person who is standing at a near place (apara), and that of 'apara' (near) in regard to a young person who is standing at a distance (para). This reversal of the concepts is due to time. The phrase 'aparasminn aparam' does not make sense.

The first one of the two sentences in D243b.4/P274a.2-3: 'dban po dan ... rtags so' may be translated as: 'The ātman is that which is together with sense-organ and object.' This looks like a definition of ātman, because this sentence immediately follows the sūtras giving the definition of time and space. However, no such definition of ātman is to be found in VS. The latter sentence exactly corresponds to the latter half of VS, 3.2.1: jñānasyābhāvo bhāvaś ca manaso lingam. Thus it may be right to conjecture that the first half of this sūtra: ātmendriyārthasaṃnikarṣe was wrongly translated or corrupted in the manuscript used.

Before citing many sūtras, Bhāvaviveka makes reference to the Vaiśeṣika concept of ātman, according to which, the ātman is not akarṭṛ as maintained by the Sāṃkhya, but it is karṭṛ and bhokṭṛ; it is different from attributes such as buddhi and so on, and is unborn (ajāta), eternal (nitya) all-pervading (vibhu) and devoid of activity (niṣkriya). He shows much interest in the Vaiśeṣika view on liberation (mokṣa) and gives a detailed explanation of it in D243b.4-244a.6/P274a.3-274b.6, which is translated below.²⁸

The Vaiśeṣika view on liberation (Translation)

Furthermore, here [in this Vaiśeṣika system, it is taught that] those who desire to attain liberation should approach a teacher (guru) and accomplish perfection internally and externally. The unseen force (adṛṣṭa) produced by practicing ablution (snāna), initiation (abhiṣecana), fast (upavāsa), residence in the house of a teacher (gurukulavāsa) as a student of the Veda, residence in a forest (vānaprasthya), sacrifice (yajña), giving (dāna), observance of the restrictions concerning direction (diś), constellation (nakṣatra) and time (kāla) is called 'dharma' (merit), and the practice for the purpose [of producing dharma] is also called dharma. That which is reverse of it is called 'adharma' (demerit). By acting for what are characterized thus as dharma and adharma, there arise pleasure (sukha) and pain (duḥkha), and attachment [to the former] and aversion [from the latter]. Being affected by these [attachment and aversion], man is born again [in another world] as in this world and undergoes transmigration. Thus it is said that man has been kept in bondage from the beginningless time by what are characterized as actions for dharma and adharma.

It might be asked: Just as the transmigration is beginningless, even so it, being of one and the same nature, is endless, isn't it? This is not right. There is the liberation [from transmigration]. By apprehending the true nature [of padārthas], man finally attains liberation. (D244a.1-3/P274a.7-b.2 is omitted)

If it is asked how dharma and adharma become extinct, [we answer that] the future [dharma and adharma] will not arise and those which have been accumulated are discarded. When the soul (ātman), which is different from body (śarīra), sense-organs (indriya) and mind (manas) is perceived, pleasure [or pain, which causes attachment or aversion] does not arise, and by the complete abandonment of the causes (sādhana), the future [dharma and adharma] also will not ensue. The accumulated [dharma and adharma] are also discarded. On apprehending the true nature of the body, man will not begin to form attachment to it.

28 TJ, Chap. VII was translated into Japanese by Y. Miyasaka in his "Ronri no Honoo ni okeru Vaisheshika Tetsugaku," Koyasan Daigaku Ronshū, Vol. 1 (1958), pp. 51-87. This translation (?) is quite unintelligible to me, and I could not derive any help from it for my understanding of the text.

When man definitely apprehends the real soul and firmly understands the true nature of the six padārthas, dharma [and adharma] also become extinct. On this point it is affirmatively²⁹ stated as follows: "By completely abandoning the body and the false notions formed by the mind, one attains the pure, perfect deliverance. [This state is] just like the fire of which the fuel is burnt out." Although the all-pervading soul is devoid of action, man recognizes the mind as the soul³⁰ [and attributes the action of the mind to the soul]. Therefore, when there is no conjunction [of the soul]³¹ with the mind, it is figuratively stated that [the soul] has become free from re-birth, [attributing to the soul the actions of departing from the body and entering into the womb, which actually belong to the mind].

It is to be noted that in this passage we find some ideas which are very close to those expressed by Praśastapāda in his Padārthadharmasamgraha (PDhS). The idea that the apprehension of the six padārthas will lead man to liberation is noticed in *PDhS*³², but it could be ascribed to a pre-Praśastapāda Vaiśeṣika, since a similar idea is already propounded in the Nyāya-sūtra, 1.1.1: pramāṇaprameya° ... °nigrahassthānānām tattvajñānān niḥśreya-sādhigamaḥ. However, that the state of perfect deliverance is described in TJ with the expression 'just like the fire of which the fuel is burnt out' (śin zad pa yi me bshin no = dagdhendānālavat), which is found in Praśastapāda's description of the state of liberation³³, seems to show that Bhāvaviveka was familiar with Praśastapāda's work. If that were the case, Praśastapāda must have lived prior to Bhāvaviveka, to whom the dates 510-570 A.D. are assigned.³⁴ Taking into account that he was under the influence of Dignāga (480-540 A.D.), I would assign Praśastapāda the dates 500-560 A.D.
