SUMATI'S SUBHĀṢITĀVALĪ

Christian Lindtner, Copenhagen

The numerous collections, or anthologies, of "nice Sanskrit verses" — for this is how the terms subhāṣita, sūkti, sūkta are here actually employed — can with the help of various criteria conveniently be divided into several groups.

First may be mentioned those collections that traditionally are ascribed to a single poet, rather than to a compiler. These collections tend to come in hundreds, or in fifties, etc. (śataka, pañcāśikā, etc.). With the possible exception of the ones ascribed to Cāṇakya, the most famous of such early collections include those traditionally ascribed to Bhartṛhari, Amaru, Vyāsa, Bilhaṇa and Śilhaṇa. Each of these collections has its own unmistakable "flavour" and distinctive character. They may contain a genuine nucleus but it is virtually impossible to prove to what extent these collections as we have them today are in fact the work of a single poet. New verses may have been interpolated in the course of their transmission. It is worthy of notice that in none of these collections does the description of the seasons play any significant role, as is e.g. the case with the Ṛtusamhāra, traditionally ascribed to Kālidāsa.

All these collections bear at least a formal relationship to earlier collections that are also traditionally ascribed to a single poet. They include not only the famous Sattasāi, or Saptaśatī, of Hāla, composed in Māhārāṣṭrī Prākṛit and divided into seven "centuries", but above all numerous Buddhist collections on a large variety of topics, e.g. Prajñāśataka, Yogaśataka, Ratnāvalī (consists of five centuries), all ascribed to Nāgārjuna, Catuḥśataka, by Āryadeva, Śatapañcāśatka and Catuḥśataka (= Varṇārhavarṇa) by Mātṛceṭa, etc. If these Buddhist masters did not introduce the śataka genre they at least did very much to propagate it.

Not to be confounded with compilations are the numerous imitations that the collections of Bhartṛhari, Amaru, etc. later on gave inspiration to. Three "centuries", for instance, deeply indebted to Amaru, all extremely rare and hardly known to the histories of Indian literature, but of a very fine quality, are Śṛṅgārahārāvalī, Śṛṅgārasamjivini and Śṛṅgārakallola, to which I shall revert elsewhere.

Then there are the anthologies that are clearly compilations and that do not pretend to be anything else. Often, but not always, names of poets or sources are provided. The only independent contribution of the compiler consists in his choice and in his arrangement of the verses compiled from other sources, primary and secondary.

Among these anthologies we may again distinguish between major and minor ones. The major ones are as a rule also the earlier ones. They contain numerous "nice verses" from a variety of sources that are otherwise lost (or at least not yet known) to us. They are, in chronological order:

|-----|---------------------------------------------------------|
| SRK | Subhāṣitaratnakoṣa of Vidyākara, ca. 1120 A.D. |
| SUK | Saduktikarnāmṛta of Śrīdharadāsa, 1205 A.D. |
| SM | Sūktimuktāvalī of Jalhaṇa, 1258 A.D. |
| SP | Śārṅgadharapaddhati of Śārṅgadhara, 1363 A.D. |
| SSN | Subhāṣitasudhānidhi of Sāyaṇa, ca. 1375 A.D. |
| SRH | Sūktiratnahāra of Sūrya, ca. 1375 A.D. |
| SA | Subhāṣitāvalī of Vallabhadeva, 15th century A.D. |

For further details see the various bibliographies of L. Sternbach (e.g. in Indologica Taurinensia I (1973), 169-255, ibid., III-IV (1975), 455-476); Mahāsubhāṣitasamgraha I, Hoshiarpur 1974, pp. vii-clxii; Subhāṣita, Gnostic and Didactic Literature, Wiesbaden 1974).

There are many other such major anthologies compiled from the 15th century onwards. Most of them have already been edited but some of them are still only available in mostly unique Sanskrit manuscripts. Among the most important of such anthologies that remain to be edited may be mentioned the Śrīṅgārālāpa and the Kāmasamūha. The Kāmasamūha is one of the valuable early collections that was overlooked by Sternbach.

Then there is a very large number of minor anthologies. To a large extent, but by no means exclusively, they draw on secondary sources for their materials. The number of "new" verses is relatively small. Many of the minor anthologies are mentioned briefly by modern scholars such as M. Krishnamachariar, History of Classical Sanskrit Literature, Delhi 1974, pp. 384-390c, and Sternbach, as mentioned above. But, as the various catalogues amply show, there are still enormous amounts of collections, mostly anonymous, that were not even mentioned by Krishnamachariar and Sternbach. Several of these are quite important.

Other sources that contain "new" as well as old verses include narrative texts such as Pañcatantra, Hitopadeśa, Vetālapañcaviṃśatikā, etc. Many verses are also to be found in the various textbooks on alamkāraśāstra. Most of these have already been edited, but again there are many that are still awaiting publication.

Finally we have the modern anthologies. Of the numerous ones compiled and published in India the most comprehensive is the Subhāṣitaratnabhāṇḍāgāra (ed. Nārāyaṇ Rām Āchārya "Kāvyaṭīrtha", Bombay 1952). The only drawback of this fine work is that it neither gives variant readings nor but occasional source references. Then there are the Western anthologies. For long the most important has been Otto Böhtlingk's Indische Sprüche, the second edition of which appeared St. Petersburg 1870-1873 in three volumes. It was reprinted Osnabrück 1966, and L. Sternbach published his Supplement to O. Böhtlingk's Indische Sprüche, Wiesbaden 1965. To this, again, was added a Revised Supplement to O. Böhtlingk's Indische Sprüche, Part I, Verses 1-500, Torino 1974, also by Sternbach. All these materials Sternbach has attempted to collect in his stupendous successor to Indische Sprüche: Mahāsubhāṣitasamgraha, the first instalment of which was published by the Vishveshvaranand Vedic Research Institute in Hoshiarpur in 1974. The editorial work is now in the hands of S. Bhaskaran Nair who took over after Sternbach passed away in 1981. Volume VI (kiṃ-kai) appeared in 1987.

The Subhāṣitāvalī here edited for the first time, is, according to its colophon and its final verse, the work of a certain Sumati. He is probably from Nepal as are the two only known manuscripts. It belongs to the group of minor anthologies, and it is probably ca. 300 years old. About the author nothing is known apart from his name as a compiler.

There are several anthologies known under the title Subhāṣitāvalī, most famous of which, of course, is that of Vallabhadeva. Our compiler only has the title and a few verses in common with Vallabhadeva's anthology.

The main value of the minor anthologies, apart from a small number of "new" verses, consists in the variant readings. These are often quite considerable. Very often the minor anthologies display variants not known from older sources. This seldom, if ever, means that the new variants are better or more authentic than readings found in primary or older secondary sources. It is clear that compilers not seldom took the liberty to introduce new readings of their own, sometimes perhaps as a result of mere lapsus memoriae. In this way even more recent minor anthologies achieve a certain, if limited, independent value. It would, of course, be quite wrong of the modern editor to "correct" such variants. It goes without saying that some of these "new" variants may also be due to scribal inadvertence, they may be simple errors, or they may have been borrowed from other sources. To make the correct decision in this matter is not always quite easy.

In particular the modern reader has to keep the latter possibility in mind, because, as known, common variants and errors mostly point to a common source. The minor anthologies may, in other words, help us draw a picture of the history of the transmission and interrelationship of the various extant anthologies. It is therefore very important that modern editors carefully note all the variants, no matter how irrelevant they may seem in themselves.

One of the supreme tasks of the historian of Sanskrit subhāṣita literature will obviously be to recover and identify as much as possible of the wreckage of India's lost poets. It is certainly true, as has often been pointed out, that Sanskrit literature is mostly so anonymous and impersonal that there seems to be no prospect in attempting to assign the many subhāṣitas to individual poets. Nevertheless one should try to sift things out. The first attempts to draw up lists of India's lost poets and their extant verses were made by Th. Aufrecht. His work was continued by F.W. Thomas (in his Kavīndravacanāsamuccaya) and by D.D. Kosambi and V.V. Gokhale (in their edition of the Subhāṣitaratnakoṣa). Finally Sternbach, adding to their findings, collected all the materials then available in his monumental Poésie Sanskrite conservée dans les anthologies et les inscriptions, I-III, Paris 1980-1985. This gives the names of no less than 1920 Sanskrit poets with an inventory of the initial lines of their extant verses. The verses themselves, with all the variants and references are given in the Mahāsubhāṣitasamgraha with translations, etc. This work, as said, is still in progress. See also Sternbach's A Descriptive Catalogue of Poets Quoted in Sanskrit Anthologies and Inscriptions, I-II, Wiesbaden 1978-1980.

In spite of the enormous work done by Sternbach there is still enough left to be done by his successors in this field. Numerous verses and variants have not been recorded by Sternbach. Many anthologies have not been identified, many are still in manuscript awaiting an editor.

One such anthology, as said, is Sumati's Subhāṣitāvalī (SĀS), here edited for the first time on the basis of two manuscripts, both from Nepal:

- L Foll. 23; size 11 in. by 4,5 in.; large, clear Devanāgarī writing; 7 or 8 lines in a page. — Belongs to the India Office Library. Cat. 4033 (1518b), collection of H.T. Colebrooke. 222 verses. Author: Sumati.
— My thanks are due to Mr. Russell Webb, London, for providing me with an excellent xerox of the MS.

N Foll. 12 (1,10 and 11 missing); size 24,5 cm. by 9,1 cm.; small, fairly clear Devanāgarī writing; 9 lines in a page. — From the Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project (NGMPP). Reel I 56/14. 206 verses. Author: Sumati. — My thanks are due to Dr. H.-O. Feistel, Berlin, who kindly provided me with the microfilm of this and other works from Nepal.

To the edition of the Sanskrit text I have appended a Pāda-Index, or pratīkas, and a table of sources (fontes). As far as possible, to avoid prolixity and repetitions, I only refer to modern Western compendia, i.e. Böhrtlingk's Indische Sprüche (IS) and/or Sternbach's Mahāsubhāṣita-saṃgraha (MS). Here further references, variants, etc. will, as a rule, be found. If Sumati's verses could not be identified in IS or MS, I have referred to other anthologies, namely Bhartṛhari's Śatakatrāyādi-Subhāṣitasamgraha (BK) (ed. D.D. Kosambi, Bombay 1948), Cāṅakya-Nīti-Text-Tradition, II, parts ii-iii (CS) (ed. L. Sternbach, Hoshiarpur 1967-1968), Jalhaṇa's Sūktimuktāvalī (SM) (ed. E. Krishnamacharya, Baroda 1938), Śārngadhara-paddhati (ŚP) (ed. P. Peterson, Bombay 1915), Subhāṣitaratnabhāṇḍāgāra (SR) (ed. Nārāyaṇ Rām Āchārya "Kāvya-tīrtha", Bombay 1952), Subhāṣitāvalī of Vallabhadeva (SU) (ed. P. Peterson, Bombay 1886), Subhāṣitamuktāvalī (SUM) (ed. R.N. Dandekar, Poona 1962), Śrī-Sūktāvalī (SUK) (ed. C. Lindtner, in Indo-Iranian Journal XXXVI (1993), 211-233). (Note that these abbreviations differ somewhat from those given e.g. by Sternbach, and above.)

It goes without saying that these references do not give the fontes that Sumati actually used. They only point out, with further references, where Sumati's verses also occur. In my opinion it would be somewhat preposterous to attempt to form an opinion about the precise sources of Sumati at the present state of research in this field. Among other desiderata I would mention that it would be very useful to have at least a critical apparatus of ŚP and SU made available. These anthologies have often been drawn upon by later compilers but we cannot be sure that they used the text as established by P. Peterson in 1915 and 1886, respectively. A Danish version of this anthology along with Śrī-Sūktāvalī will appear under the title Gode Ord fra det gamle Indien.
