One of the most beautiful customs which has been in vogue for centuries is that practised by the Alpine herdsmen of Switzerland when the light of day is waning and the sun sinks in the west.

Just as the last rays of the sun are disappearing, and the golden glow is reflected on the white mountain tops, the herdsman living on the highest mountain peak, takes his Alpine horn and calls loudly: "Praise the Lord God! Praise the Lord God!" As soon as these words are heard by the neighbouring herdsman below, he takes his Alpine horn and relays the call to his neighbour. Down the mountain side the call goes, sounding like some wonderful echo and lasting for about a quarter of an hour. When silence falls, every herdsman kneels by his flock in evening devotions. Finally, when devotions are over, the herdsman living on the highest ridge again calls, "Good-night! Good-night!", and this call is in turn carried down the mountain side, and with this last thought of gratitude and praise for their Maker, the herdsmen drift back to their cottages and all is silent.

A fellow-countryman, a N.Z. resident of many years standing, happened to visit his Homeland. One evening he was present at a party, when he was asked to give a Maori Haka. His knowledge of Maori lore was very limited, but still he did not want to show his ignorance, so he brushed up his rather fierce looking moustache, rolled his eyes, and went through all the needed movements, reciting in his rather resonant voice:-

KOMATA, KOMATA, WAIRANGI, TARINGAMUTU, WAIPUKURAU, ETC. ETC.

Wild applause greeted him at the finish from an appreciative audience who was quite ignorant of the fact that they had been treated to some N.Z. geography.
