IMPORTANT VOTINGS IN SWITZERLAND.

On the 6th of July the Swiss people, by an overwhelming majority, have accepted the law for the introduction of a compulsory old age insurance. All the cantons, except Obwalden, have accepted.

The economic articles have also been accepted; these, however, only by the small majority of 62,500, thirteen (13) cantons having accepted and nine (9) rejected.

The participation was 87%. The results are:-

SUNDRY NEWS.

Switzerland has formally ratified the constitution of the World health Organization. The ratification by Switzerland brings to eight the countries that have pledged themselves to adhere to the health charter. Other signers are Canada, Great Britain, China, Iran, New Zealand, Syria and Liberia.

The Swiss Government has opened customs offices at Zermatt and St. Moritz, so that tourists may send their baggage direct to either resort and have it examined there instead of at the frontier.

Monsieur Abol Chassem Pourevaly, Minister Plenipotentiary of Iran, has presented his credentials to Dr. Etter, President of the Swiss Confederation, and so has Monsieur Fernando Cisterna Ortiz, the newly appointed Minister of the Republic of Chile. (A.T.S.)

Federal Councillor Celio has attended the canonisation celebration of Nicholas von Flue, which took place in Rome on the 15th of this month, his visit did not bear any official character, and was a purely private affair. (A.T.S.)

Sion asleep at the foot of its two medieval fortresses, Tourbillon and Valère; from the rose-tinged shadow of apricot orchards at Saxon and Martigny. The Rhone is a great traveller and he appreciates beauty!

The Ticino is like a picture-book, each page revealing a new delight, but the Lemman district is a painting by a great master. A book is made to be perused, but a painting needs to be contemplated. To Lake Lemman will always return, again and again, all those who seek to forget the too narrow horizons of daily life by communing with Nature in her most noble form, when earth, sky and water hold equal kingdoms and compose their most majestic harmonies.

Southwards lie the mountains, the Dents du Midi sheathed still in snowy armour; to the north, the waters mirror the long cliff-like walls of the vine terraces where labour husbandmen in blue jeans. Above Montreux, the mountains open wide, like some immense sun gallery where not a ray of sunshine goes astray and where, day after day, the tender green of spring meadows bites more deeply into the snows of Caux and Jaman furrowed still by swiftly disappearing ski tracks. The last skiers of the season speed down the Rochers-de-Naye and already the first hardy little lake craft bob gaily on the dancing waters. When her time has come, Spring sets to work with all the startling speed of a magician. In the space of one morning, an enormous magnolia tree is covered with a thousand rosy bowls, woods are carpeted with primroses, scyllas and hepatica. Mountain railroads suddenly wend their cog-wheeled way through flowery banks. One afternoon, they may take you to Caux, to Glion above Montreux, to the Pléiades, the Mont-Pelérin or to Chexbres above Vevey, or farther afield to the Lausanne Signal or the Signal de Bougy above Rolle - to any of those sheer balconies, seemingly suspended between sky and water, which overlook this beautiful Lake.

The district of Gruyère and the town of that name, the most picturesque of Swiss townships, must also feature on the programme of the Rambler in Western Switzerland.

An extremely well devised system of holiday travel tickets enables sightseers to travel as freely as they wish, to arrange delightful trips and excursions by train and on foot, to alternate hotel menus with delicious rustic snacks in village cafés.

Sports facilities and amusements of all kinds are not lacking in the main centres along Lake Lemman, for the region has, for centuries, catered for foreign travellers who today, in our most modern of centuries, are provided with infinite resources; tennis, golf, bathing, riding, cycling, rowing and sailing. For the higher brows, theatres, concert halls and art exhibitions supply more intellectual delights. To others, casinos, cinemas and dance halls extend their mundane invitation and restaurants of repute invite those who appreciate good cuisine.

Lausanne and Geneva, the City of Hills and the City of Parks, where the air from wide horizons blows so refreshingly over city life and pleasures, offer many unforgettable joys in springtime. And those who thirst for provincial quietude will find endearing welcome in the charming and historic townlets of Morges, Rolle, Nyon and Coppet.
