SWITZERLAND'S TV COOK

Switzerland's top chef, Anton Mosimann, 44, is very much loved by British TV viewers. In his new TV cooking course he will try to make his British audience appreciate the real Swiss Emmentaler cheese. To make the show more authentic, he presents his cooking course dressed in his traditional Swiss outfit.

Europe's largest solar power station has just been put into operation at the Mont-Soleil, above St. Imier in the Jura. It is composed of 10560 solar panels spread over an area as large as 3 soccer fields and has cost over 8 million Swiss Francs. Used mainly for research and demonstration, the station has a capacity of 500KW, sufficient to supply power to 200 houses. The station was officially opened by the Federal Councillor Adolf Ogi.

IN WINTERTHUR YOU MUST GRIND YOUR TEETH IF YOU HAVE LOST A TOOTH.

A broken tooth is bad enough anywhere. But if this happens to you in Winterthur, especially at night or during the weekend, you are in big trouble.

Desperate patients who phone the telephone information service for help are advised to travel to Zurich for treatment because Winterthur, the sixth largest city in Switzerland, has no proper emergency dental service.

The cartoon below illustrates the Winterthurers' plight.

"You mean to tell me it's urgent?"

HAPPY BIRTHDAY BRIENZ-ROTHORN RAILWAY

This year, the Brienzer Rothorn Railway celebrates it's 100th birthday as the last active steam-driven cog railway still operating in Switzerland.

Five of the seven engines have been in service since the railway began. A brand new steam engine was put into service last June, a world novelty of its own.
