HELVETIA

WINTER RELICS

The Swiss love to slide down snow covered slopes in or on any conceivable types of sleighs, luges, snowboards, skis and other contraptions looking like some weird bath tubs.

That some of these gadgets did not seem to be able to sustain the strain or that their owners expected too much of them is clearly illustrated on this picture. The photo was taken at the Triemli railway station at the foot of the famous Uetliberg near Zurich where people simply left behind their broken-down contraptions for someone else to get rid of them. The area was quickly nicknamed "Schlittenfriedhof" but the local authorities, left with all this rubbish to clean up were understandably not amused.

What happened to the old fashioned Swiss attitude of cleanliness, order and neatness. Not much left of it judging by this picture.
