

Objektyp: FrontMatter

Zeitschrift: Helvetia : magazine of the Swiss Society of New Zealand

Band (Jahr): 74 (2008)

Heft [5]

PDF erstellt am: 08.08.2024

Nutzungsbedingungen

Die ETH-Bibliothek ist Anbieterin der digitalisierten Zeitschriften. Sie besitzt keine Urheberrechte an den Inhalten der Zeitschriften. Die Rechte liegen in der Regel bei den Herausgebern.

Die auf der Plattform e-periodica veröffentlichten Dokumente stehen für nicht-kommerzielle Zwecke in Lehre und Forschung sowie für die private Nutzung frei zur Verfügung. Einzelne Dateien oder Ausdrucke aus diesem Angebot können zusammen mit diesen Nutzungsbedingungen und den korrekten Herkunftsbezeichnungen weitergegeben werden.

Das Veröffentlichen von Bildern in Print- und Online-Publikationen ist nur mit vorheriger Genehmigung der Rechteinhaber erlaubt. Die systematische Speicherung von Teilen des elektronischen Angebots auf anderen Servern bedarf ebenfalls des schriftlichen Einverständnisses der Rechteinhaber.

Haftungsausschluss

Alle Angaben erfolgen ohne Gewähr für Vollständigkeit oder Richtigkeit. Es wird keine Haftung übernommen für Schäden durch die Verwendung von Informationen aus diesem Online-Angebot oder durch das Fehlen von Informationen. Dies gilt auch für Inhalte Dritter, die über dieses Angebot zugänglich sind.

Traditional Cow Fights

Cow fights are traditional throughout the region where the Eringer breed is raised in Central Valais, Lower Valais, and the Aoste Valley in Northern Italy. They take place in late spring when the animals are released have met with great success. In contrast to bull-fighting, cow-fighting is a bloodless and relatively tame sport. It is more of a locking-of-horns-and-shoving match, really. Each battle is quite an impressive sight, though: A cow from their winter barns. More than other cow breeds, these small but hearty black creatures with short robust horns have retained the hierarchical organization that is instinctive to any animal society. Thus, at the start of spring, they battle amongst themselves to determine the pecking order for leading the herd to summer in the high mountain pastures.

Heads knock, horns lock...

The fights don't occur in an organized fashion: Each cow chooses her opponent. However, competitions have been held in the last several years to determine the Queen of the region or canton. Live national television broadcasts of these folkloric competitions stops grazing, lowers her head, snorts noisily and scrapes the ground with her hind hooves. If a cow of equal strength takes up the challenge, she will move towards the first with the same snorting and scraping. The approach is slow and careful. The fight begins in a fury, heads knock, horns lock, each cow searching for a good hold. Then they lean in and press with all their might, advancing and re-treating with each gust of strength. After a battle, which can last anywhere up to several minutes, the loser does an about face and runs away, with her victorious rival in hot pursuit, striking out with a few more jabs of the horns.

The Eringer Breed

Eringer cows are bred almost exclusively in the Valais and the Aoste Valley, Italy. A herdbook was established in 1917. In 2001, 6200 breeding females were registered, with 181 males in what is elegantly described as "in natural service" and 10 used for artificial insemination.

The Eringer breed has a black/red/brown coat and pronounced horns. They are bred for milk and meat – and are also used for "vegetation management".

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

Editorial/President's report	2
Carolyn Lane: Bodensee Bulletin	3
Club News	4-6
Children's page	7
Ban on animal meal to be overturned	8
Eco-car revolution	9
Potato promoted	10
Experts sound alarm bells/Recipe	11
Swiss store seeds in Norway	12
Swiss gypsies relive a painful past	13
Nigel's African diary	14
Tick invasion	15
Suonen/Bisses	16