

The soup that united Switzerland

Autor(en): Wey-Korthals, Susanne

Objektyp: Article

Zeitschrift: Helvetia : magazine of the Swiss Society of New Zealand

Band (Jahr): 85 (2019)

Heft [1]

PDF erstellt am: 12.07.2024

Persistenter Link: <https://doi.org/10.5169/seals-943839>

Nutzungsbedingungen

Die ETH-Bibliothek ist Anbieterin der digitalisierten Zeitschriften. Sie besitzt keine Urheberrechte an den Inhalten der Zeitschriften. Die Rechte liegen in der Regel bei den Herausgebern. Die auf der Plattform e-periodica veröffentlichten Dokumente stehen für nicht-kommerzielle Zwecke in Lehre und Forschung sowie für die private Nutzung frei zur Verfügung. Einzelne Dateien oder Ausdrucke aus diesem Angebot können zusammen mit diesen Nutzungsbedingungen und den korrekten Herkunftsbezeichnungen weitergegeben werden. Das Veröffentlichen von Bildern in Print- und Online-Publikationen ist nur mit vorheriger Genehmigung der Rechteinhaber erlaubt. Die systematische Speicherung von Teilen des elektronischen Angebots auf anderen Servern bedarf ebenfalls des schriftlichen Einverständnisses der Rechteinhaber.

Haftungsausschluss

Alle Angaben erfolgen ohne Gewähr für Vollständigkeit oder Richtigkeit. Es wird keine Haftung übernommen für Schäden durch die Verwendung von Informationen aus diesem Online-Angebot oder durch das Fehlen von Informationen. Dies gilt auch für Inhalte Dritter, die über dieses Angebot zugänglich sind.

The Soup that united Switzerland

From the hamlet of Kappel am Albis with its steep-gabled houses, well-tended fields and flocks of pigeons roosting in timber barns, across the pastures to a twisted thicket of trees is a site of far more historical importance than any visitor would ever realise.

These fields have played witness to some of the most important moments in Swiss history. Switzerland found a way to compromise here. To concentrate on what we had in common rather than focus on our differences. It sounds remarkable, but we did it over a bowl of soup.

The dish in question is Milchsuppe, or milk soup. Ladled out in Kappel Abbey's dimly lit cellar as it has been for centuries – first by monks, now by chefs as part of the convent's rebirth as a spiritual retreat – the mustard-yellow broth is arguably one of the most emblematic culinary delicacies in Switzerland. But while it can be hard to find on menus in many local restaurants, and is largely forgotten in certain parts of the country, it remains ingrained in the nation's psyche. As much as fondue, raclette or Bircher muesli, Milchsuppe is Switzerland in a bowl.

Straightforward yet scrumptious, the soup was traditionally made with two simple ingredients: milk and bread. Today, it is simmered with Sbrinz, a flavourful Parmesan-type cheese, then topped with a sprig of parsley. Once the staple of peasants, the recipe has been dictated by history, its essence packed with meaning – from the ingredients first supplied by warring cantons to the bread that floats on the surface – shaped over the years so flavour can be dispersed into each slurp. But as moreish as the dish is, it comes with an even more delicious backstory.

No-one in Kappel am Albis can recall exactly how the soup came to be – or the true ingredients used when it was first made in the field near Kappel Abbey. But there is one story on which everybody agrees: the broth was created by accident in June 1529 when two hungry armies met on a battlefield on what is now known as the Milchsuppestein, or 'milk soup pasture'. And it's a meal that's since played an outsized role in Swiss history, becoming a modern-day symbol of diplomacy and reconciliation. During the Swiss Reformation in the early 16th Century, the Milchsuppestein marked the turbulent frontier and dividing line between opposing Protestant and Catholic-leaning territories. To the north was the Protestant-favouring canton of Zürich, led by Martin Luther-like reformer Ulrich Zwingli, a parish overseer who was spreading reform. To the south was Zug and the allied Catholic cantons of the Old Swiss Confederacy, who felt their rural union should remain aligned with the Vatican and Rome. Schism and distrust was rife, and come summer 1529, diplomacy between the two cantons had failed. Zürich's soldiers, kitted-out with armour and pikes, marched south to war.

Negotiations continued, but to the amazement of everyone, the infantry brokered their own truce over a cooking pot while on the battlefield. Naturally, they were hungry after the long march, and Zürich had plenty of bread and salt, while Zug had a surplus of milk from its farms. From that the legend was born.

Nothing could ever be that simple, of course. Tensions remained, leading to the Second War of Kappel two years later when the opposing cantons once again took to the battlefield. But the mythology of the soup had already started to stick, and it has proven to be a catalyst for Swiss diplomacy ever since.

Nowadays when politicians or councillors have disputes it's still served. It's even been reclaimed by the right-wing SVP political party, who use it as a symbol of the Switzerland they champion. All countries polish their history a little, and we've done the same – we've turned the soup into a national icon.

Names like Ulrich Zwingli are bound to the Zurich's history, and his name can be spotted on Zwingliplatz at the Grossmünster, the twin-towered Protestant church where Zwingli worked until his death in 1531. Here, in 1519, the firebrand became pastor, energising the Swiss Reformation movement.

But religion aside, Zürich's renaissance spirit is enough to entice those without the slightest interest in the Reformation. Tucked-away inside Zürich's temple to fine art, the Kunsthaus, is Swiss painter Albert Anker's national treasure, Die Kappeler Milchsuppe (The Milk Soup from Kappel), from 1869. Up close, it shows a meadow-turned-soup kitchen, home to a tangle of peasants who have swapped maces and heavy pikes for dagger-cut bread and wooden spoons, shared across enemy lines.

For as arbitrary as the milestone may be, it remains a date woven into the very fabric of Switzerland.

As a window to the past, both Die Kappeler Milchsuppe and the Milchsuppestein feel hardly in the spirit of romantic history, however it remains a date woven into the very fabric of Switzerland. As Zürich faces the major anniversary of 500 years of its reformation in 2019, it's still considered one of the most influential events in the country's history. Just as surely as the infantry truce on a battlefield over a cooking pot of bread and milk soup!

Abridged Version of an article by retired pastor and part-time historian Susanne Wey-Korthals

Cervelat • Bratwurst • Wienerli • Landjäger
Mostbröckli • Coppa • Prosciutto

All of our amazing products are produced right here in sunny Marlborough. They are gluten free and MSG free.

Pick up is available from our boutique butchery or we ship overnight to anywhere in New Zealand.

Orders must be placed by Wednesday night for Friday morning delivery.

17 Timandra Place | Blenheim 7201
Ph 021 083 044 05
peter@theswissbutcher.co.nz

For product listing and ordering visit our website
theswissbutcher.co.nz

Prepare for an extraordinary night!

Auckland Swiss Club presents

FASNACHT-CARNIVAL

FANCY DRESS • DISCO • DJ • GUGGEMUSIK • CASH BAR & FOOD

Saturday 2nd March 2019
7pm till late
Held at the Swiss Farm

BLÖDE IDEE MIT DEM GEMEINSAMEN KOSTÜM!

More info coming soon on www.Swiss.org.nz