CONFERENCE REPORT

“Enacting Intersubjectivity:
Paving the Way for a Dialogue between Cognitive Science, Social Cognition
and Neuroscience”

Università della Svizzera italiana, Lugano, 13th and 14th February 2009

The International workshop “Enacting Intersubjectivity: paving the way for a dialogue between cognitive science, social cognition and neuroscience” was held on the 13th and 14th of February 2009, in Lugano at the Università della Svizzera italiana (USI). The workshop was organized by the Institute of Psychology and Sociology of Communication (IPSC), at the Faculty of Communication Sciences; it has been financed by USI and by the Swiss National Science Foundation.

This first edition workshop is part of an ambitious project started with the publication of the book “Enacting Intersubjectivity: A cognitive and Social Perspective on the Study of Interactions” edited by Francesca Morganti, Antonella Carassa and Giuseppe Riva.

The study of intersubjectivity has opened up new perspectives for cognitive and social researches that investigate mental capacities allowing humans to relate to each other and to engage in social interactions. Intersubjectivity is a basic dimension of consciousness on which socialness is grounded.

Up to now, it takes place – at the very heart of contemporary studies – an intense debate around some central questions that concern the nature and forms of human intersubjectivity, its development and its role in situated joint activities.

The landscape of disciplines involved in the study of intersubjectivity is vast, and includes philosophy, neurosciences, cognitive science, comparative and developmental psychology, social cognition and others. This aspect, on one hand, points to the power and the fecundity of the construct; on the other hand, it may be a source of misunderstandings, due to significant differences in theoretical presuppositions and research methodologies. As a consequence, it becomes extremely important building opportunities for comparison and debate.

Both the publication of the quoted book, and the realization of this international workshop have to be considered as opportunities to create border areas, aimed at fostering the cross-fertilization between different perspectives and paving the way for a constructive dialogue between the disciplines.

The workshop offered a general overview on contemporary and innovative researches on intersubjectivity, through the contributions of several eminent scholars from European and American countries (namely the book chapters' authors), who have been invited at the workshop.

The workshop was organized in three main invited sessions. The first one was titled "Enactive Cognition, towards an embodied approach to the study of mind." This session contained several contributions discussing intersubjectivity in terms of socially embodied human capability. The speakers proposed theoretical and experimental contributions about the function of the body in social interaction, describing how our intersubjective abilities are grounded in socially distributed and embodied actions, functioning as a basis for mutual sharing of experience in joint activities.

The second invited session, "Mind in interactions, towards a cognitive socialness," concerned what happens when a subject meets another subject, focusing on the interaction process, especially in a social-cognitive perspective. Some contributions tried to define the problem of understanding others, moving on two directions: first investigating the social understanding, second analyzing the understanding of social events. Other contributions in this session tried to deepen the role of intersubjectivity in the development of communication and cognitive development, both in typical and atypical development.

In the third invited session, "Neurologically linked, towards a neuroscientific endorsement," some researches were proposed, presenting results about the neurocognitive mechanisms involved. In particular, it was discussed the mirror-neurons' function, enabling an individual to understand the actions performed by others, matching the sensory with motor representations of those actions.

The invited sessions were spaced out by four oral sessions and a poster session in which contributions from comparative psychology, developmental psychology, philosophy, cognitive science and neuroscience were presented.

Moreover, during the workshop a round table was held on the most discussed issues in the intersubjectivity area, offering an opportunity for exchanging point of views on methodology, interdisciplinary contributions and future trends.

This first international workshop, in my opinion, has been a fruitful event in the complex landscape of intersubjectivity research, offering challenging contributions for further researches and valuable exchanges in the theoretical framework.
