SWISS SKIING SEASON.

The skiing season has begun in Switzerland, where abundant snow has fallen during the past few days. The snow is more than 3ft deep at a height of 4.800ft. and nearly 2ft. at the 3,000ft. level. Many roads in the Jura are completely blocked.

MITTELHOLZER'S FLIGHT TO INDIA.

MITTELHOLZER'S FLIGHT TO INDIA. Walter Mittelholzer, of the "Swissair" will start, early next year a flight to India, in the company of Lord Beaverbrook. This flight will be undertaken with a Douglas machine. The destination is the island of Bali, at the same time, a flight over the Himalaja is in-tended tended.

SWISS BANK REORGANISED.

As reported previously the Cantonal Bank of Neuchâtel met with difficulties owing to heavy withdrawals of deposits. An agreement has now been signed between the Cantonal Bank of Neuchâtel, on the one hand, and the Swiss Federal Council and various Cantonal banks on the other, with the purpose of putting the bank on a sound basis. The administration of the bank is being reorganised; Mr. G. A. Borel has been elected President of the administrative council.

BALANCING SWISS BUDGET.

Following the publication of the Finance Bill, the Swiss Federal Council has issued a de-tailed report in which it justifies the drastic measures it intends to take in order to balance measures it intends to take in order to balance the Federal Budget. In the report the Federal Council makes it plain that it wishes to give a picture of the pre-sent situation as it is and to make clear to the Swiss population how grave the situation really is

As far as foreign countries are concerned, how ever, one may be tempted to use brighter colours to preserve confidence and thus safeguard the Swiss franc.

Swiss franc. In dealing with the problem of the economic crisis the report states that Switzerland will never succeed in alleviating the crisis by steps such as devaluation, inflation, clearing and quota systems, exports subsidies, &c. Switzerland represents a link only in the long chain of world trade. So long as world trade is ailing, therefore, Switzerland is unable to recover by itself. The most adequate economic, financial and political guidance is thus unable to turn Switzerland into an "isle of prosperity."

There are many who are wondering why the economic crisis has not been overcome long ago. Instead, one ought to wonder that Switzerland has not become still a greater victim of the crisis, especially as she, more than any other country, dependent upon exports. The fact that unemployment in Switzerland is still lower that intempoyment in Switzerhald is still lower than in other countries which can be approached for the purpose of a comparison shows that the Swiss economic policy has, after all, not miscarried as many a critic believes.

an, not miscarried as many a critic believes. The report admits that the economic and financial situation has become more serious in recent months. In the opinion of the Swiss Federal Council this is mainly due to the slack-ness in the building trade. For a long time the home market was artificially supported by what must be described as an exaggerated building activity.

This activity was partly due to an unusually high liquidity in the Money market, which lasted until the spring of 1935. It must also be ascribed to a flight into anything representing real value, whereby foreign "flight money" also played its rôle.

Amid a period of crisis, therefore, Switzer and a period of crisis, therefore, is land, during recent years, experienced a p "prosperity." The setback was inevitable a partial

At a time when it appears that world trade At a time when it appears that world trade is on its way to recovery. Switzerland sinks more and more into the crisis. There is no reason for despair, however, "let us remember that in Swit-zerland the turning point from prosperity to crisis set in at a somewhat later date than abroad, so that a later recovery should not in the least surprise us," says the report.

least surprise us," says the report. "Let us also remember that after the world crisis following the war the depression in Swit-zerland also lasted longer." Switzerland ought to rejoice at the fact that some of the leading nations show signs of improvement, the report says, as this will be Switzerland's chance to find its lost markets again.

The impediments on foreign trade, Professor Bachmann emphasised, form a menace to the basis of the gold standard. Economic co-opera-tion between the gold countries is therefore, of tion between the gold countries is therefore of vital importance.

SWITZERLAND'S TRADE WITH IRISH FREE STATE. Figures which have just been published show that Irish Exports to Switzerland in 1934 amounted to £69,815 as compared with £59,160 in 1922, and £61,983 in 1929. In each year, with the exception of 1934, Switzerland bought more goods in the Irish Free State than the Free State purchased in Switzer-land, which, for many years, has been one of the largest buyers of Irish horses. In 1934 one tenth of the total number of Irish horses exported went to Switzerland, where, as a rule, they are trained in the army and then used for agricultural work. Irish imports from Switzerland are made up of machinery and watches.

TICINO.

Three hundred gangers are working to clear a landslide on the St. Gothard Railway line be-tween the tunnels at Biasca and Osogna. The line is completely blocked for a distance of 200 yards, and it is expected that the work of clearing it will not be completed for two days. A motor service is meanwhile carrying passengers, bag-gage, and mail between Biasca and Osogna.

VIOLETTA MONTUSCHI.

At a recent concert of the Recital Club of London we had the great pleasure of hearing Miss Violetta Montuschi, whose father is well-known to many members of the Swiss Colony, playing various compositions on the plano with great technical perfection and a fine sense of musical values. Her programme included some lovely selections from Bach, Scarlatti and Haydn, a Brahms Rhapsody and various pieces by Chopin. While the more formal style of the older com-possers may perhaps suit Miss Montuschi's self-possessed temperament better than the strong emotionality of Chopin and Brahms, she never-theless showed herself fully equal to giving an interesting and pleasing interpretation of the latter as well as the former. A clever and a charming artist! At a recent concert of the Recital Club of "Disastrous consequences of my first ball."

By ST

Continued.

One little happening on that memorable eve-ning pleased me mightily, although it consisted in the fact, that my fair partner, made, what is called in French a faux pas or in English " put-ting one's foot into it."

Amongst the numerous spectators, was my aunt, — the one who had intimated that my men-tal faculties were somehow impaired through the tal racinties were somenow imparted through the fall which I had sustained at a very tender age. — There she sat in all her glory, as if it was her show. Her critical eye scanned the happy faces of the revellers, but the happiness of all the young people, which was written on their faces, did not eem to find an echo in her spinster bosom.

Each time I passed her, I noticed a sarcastic smile passing over her visage, in fact it was so obvious that my partner asked me, who that lady with the "rhinoceros face" was.

I could have bugged her for that remark, but as it rather cast a slur on my family I had to inform her, that the Lady with such "distin-guished" features was a great-aunt of mine; which brought forth some profuse apologies, which, I need hardly mention, were accepted in grood grace good grace.

In fact, this little slip of the tongue, in-creased her attention to me, and I noticed conse-quently a little squeeze of the hand, which I took for a happy omen.

As all good things come to an end, so this "Soirée Dansante" finished up amongst great enthusiasm. Many a parting glance, from a pair of sparkling eyes laid the foundation for future romance romance.

This time my cab took us back, minus the chocolate box, but with an additional weight of happiness and sweet remembrances.

WIT AND HUMOUR.

From the Mother of Parliaments.

In moving the address to the King's Speech in the House of Commons Mr. W. W. Wakefield (C.) in a maiden speech said that he approached his task with great diffidence, for in touching on great political questions of the day he must do so without introducing matters of a controversial neutron work he was not use her thet was to be so without introducing matters of a controlerisar nature, and he was not sure how that was to be done. If he crossed the white line he begged the forbearance of the House for he was a beginner, steering through the maze of traffic without even a large red letter L attached to his person fore and aft.

Referring to the air defences, he continued: Just over 300 years ago efforts were made to expedite the business of the House from below. To-day we might still search the cellars with various fears — and hopes — but the real threat was from the clouds.

Mr. Attlee (Opposition Leader) in criticising the King's Speech was struck by a "lull" in foreign affairs, believing that there was still a war in Abyssinia. He described the attitude of the Government in the latter conflict as follows : What we want to-day is a vindication of pub-lic law acainst an aggressor — Can you imagine

What we want to usy is a vinceation of par-lic law against an aggressor. Can you imagine a situation in which the Home Secretary could get up and deplore an outbreak of house-breaking, but could say that he hoped he would shortly come to a settlement which would be equally acceptable to the house-breakers, the victims, and the Home Secretary?

It would be a difficult task. But I am sure It would be a dimcuit task. But 1 am sure the present Home Secretary would be equal to it, because, after all, that is exactly the line he took in the case of Japan. That would involve sym-pathy with the house-breakers.

Acting like a Gentleman, I ought to have instructed the cab driver to return post haste, in order to claim this shawl, which, as it seemed, was of great importance. But there was a snag, I realised that I had only about enough money I realised that I had only about enough monley on me, to pay the fare straight back, and as a return journey would have meant additional fare, I suggested that the lost article should be claimed the next day by me. This proposal was graciously accepted, and we arrived at our des-tination without any further troubles. In fact I was quite pleased that I would have

In fact I was quite pleased that I would have another opportunity to show my gallantry, and on paying the fare I warmly shook hands with the cab dryer, who, quite unaccustomed to such en-thusiastic acknowledgement of services rendered, owned, which his head. gravely shook his head; — Was it a premonition of what was to come? —

As promised, I called the next day, and luckily, the lost article was handed over to me.

luckily, the lost article was handed over to me. Needless to say, that I made use of this, almost Heaven sent opportunity to add a little billet doux with the parcel, which was duly for-warded to the fair recipitent. That little note contained a considerable number of allusions to heavenly eyes, warm beating heart, sun kissed locks and dainty hands. Nightingales were sing-ing and chirping throughout the letter, it was simply an orgy of loving and tender thoughts.— During the next day or two I was in a state

During the next day or two I was in a state of great excitement, because I was sure that my gallant efforts to redeem this historic shawl, and the accompanying letter would get some acknow ledgement; — it did. —

On returning home two days after the event, I found a little parcel awaiting me, somehow or other it looked familiar to me, but after all par-cels always have a certain similarity. With trem-bling hands I opened it, and there a short note — not even signed, — met my wondering eyes, it read "This does not belong to me!" I was at my wits end, what did it mean? I undid the packet and — lo and behold — it con-tained a pair of red bathing-slips — not a costume, with which one is so familiar in this country, often adorning some bathing belle — no, simply an ordinary pair of bathing slips which boys used to wear in those days. — My sister, who watched me, said afterwards, On returning home two days after the event, boys used to wear in those days. — My sister, who watched me, said afterwards, that my face reflected all the colours of the rain-bow, and no wonder, this was a terrible tragedy, how did it happen? The explanation was simple enough, the cupboard which temporaly harboured the shawl ready for dispatch, also contained a parcel of similar size in which the above men-tioned article was needed up, neady for the part tioned article was packed up, ready for the next bathing season; an unlucky slip of the hand made me take the wrong parcel, thus nipping in the bud a romance which started in such a promising way way. Although a detailed report of this most un-fortunate happening was at once sent, and an ex-change of "goods" effected, no excuse was ac-cepted, and I was accused of having played a very bad joke; and whenever I met a member of this distinguished family. I was treated with utter contempt. In fact, I felt so miserable that I seriously contemplated to leave this valley of sor-row, to a land where people do not wear shawls nor bathing slips, and even to this day I cannot look a lady's shawl straight in the face without getting the "shudders." The End.

The End.
