FEDERAL.

Swiss Attitude to League.

In the Swiss Parliament M. Motta, President of the Confederation and Foreign Minister, made an important statement on the effect of the withdrawal of Italy from the League of Nations on Swiss foreign policy.

"The League of 1937 does not much resemble the idea we had of it in 1920," he said. Switzerland had adhered to the League, and that adherence was wise. The main obstacle that had had to be overcome was due to the Swiss tradition of neutrality. It had been thought that if Swiss neutrality was safeguarded in its military aspects Switzerland could run the risk of being party to the League, that risk being compensated for by the guarantees of security which the League was to afford.

The particular status of Switzerland was confirmed by the Versailles Treaty and defined in the London Declaration of February 13th, 1920, and it could be regarded as satisfactory. But now Switzerland was compelled to consider whether for that status all the exigencies of the League system of security were necessary; and the withdrawal of Italy from the League, following that of Germany, another of Switzerland's neighbours, made it urgent to examine the question. The view of the Federal Council was that the Confederation must make it clear that Swiss neutrality was not differential but complete and in conformity with the age-old tradition and the geography and history of the country. The time had come for them to act with calmness and firmness, without nervousness.

Referring to the initiative launched to secure the withdrawal of Switzerland from the League, M. Motta declared that nobody should dream of asking her to do so.

If the League had failed in some cases (he said) her value as a symbol remained. International co-operation was a necessity. Its form might be altered, but it had to exist in substance.

Switzerland, the President declared, must not give the impression that she was in the orbit of a determined group of States. "We are our masters, and want to be autonomous and free."

Swiss military neutrality was questioned by nobody (he went on), and it would run no danger from Switzerland's membership of the League. The system of sanctions was now practically unobtainable, and the League should now, if it wanted to become universal, give up methods of compulsion.

The League ran the risk of transforming itself into a coalition drawn up against another coalition, but the Swiss Federal Council was persuaded that Great Britain and France, seconded by the firm will of other States such as the Netherlands, Belgium, and the Scandinavian countries, would prevent it from falling into the fatal and unforgivable error of becoming the servant of one or another ideology, and thus altering its nature, its reasons of existence, its aims, and tendencies.

Switzerland would play in the League, tomorrow as yesterday, her modest part, which was not devoid of significance.

The whole question, concluded the President, would be brought before Parliament in January, when a full report on the question would be made by the Foreign Office.

M. Motta's statement was received with unanimous applause.

Nestlé and Anglo-Swiss Holding.

The directors of Nestlé and Anglo-Swiss Holding Company propose to reduce the capital from Swiss Frs.116,000,000 to Frs.58,000,000 (from about £5,370,000 to £2,685,000) by the repayment to shareholders of Frs.100 per share, reducing the nominal value of each share from Frs.200 to Frs.100.

A meeting to consider the necessary resolution has been called for 26th January at Cham.

In consequence of repayments of capital by allied companies, the company's cash and bank resources are adequate for the proposed operation. It is stated that during the course of 1938 the company's liquid funds will be further increased so as to be amply sufficient to cover any further financing the company may be called upon to effect.

It is anticipated that a distribution of Fr.30 per share will be available in respect of 1937. Unilac Inc. should be in a position to distribute a first dividend.

The directors will propose at the general meeting a modification of the articles of association. In view of the writing down of the Ordinary capital by Fr.200 per share in 1922, the Board will submit a proposal to create "bons d'amortissement" (Funding bonds) for attachment to the present share certificates. A part of the annual distribution of the company will be attributed in future to these bonds.

The company holds securities in subsidiary and associated companies, including Nestlé and Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Company, which produce chocolate, condensed milk, cheese and infant milk goods. The shares are quoted in Zurich at Swiss Frs.1.132.
