SWISS LEGATION, W.1.
London, 21st March, 1946.

NEW APPOINTMENT AT THE SWISS LEGATION.

M. Frédéric Rothenbühler, 2nd Secretary of Legation, has been attributed to the Swiss Legation in London. M. Frédéric Rothenbühler studied Law and Economics chiefly at the University in Berne and after some practical work in a lawyer's office and in various Courts took his degree in 1941 as solicitor. He then worked on the staff of the Federal Economical Department; in 1942 he was transferred to the Federal Political Department, where he was appointed Attaché.

AFTERMATH.

When in their folly men unsheathed the sword,
And nations, blindly hating, came to grips,
All human welfare faded in eclipse
And widespread misery was their reward.

Dead are their hopes that once so highly soared,
They hear, afar, with curses on their lips,
The dreaded horsemen of Apocalypse,
Whose shouts and hoofbeats ring a ghastly chord.

For famine stalks through war-torn stricken lands,
Nature herself averts her kindly face
And dark forebodings haunt the human race.
Victor and vanquished both hold out their hands,
Not for Gargantuan feasts in sumptuous style,
But for a meagre crust Was it worth while?

THE SWISS POPULAR DIETS.

Swiss Democracy is by no means merely a product of the French Revolution. Already in the Middle Ages the sovereignty of the people expressed itself in the Popular Diets, such as are still to be found in the cantons of Glarus, both Appenzells, and in Obwalden and Nidwalden. Once a year, either on the last Sunday in April or the first in May, all the inhabitants enjoying the full rights and honours of citizenship assemble in the open air, in order to elect officials and vote on the laws. The entire people determines its destiny by the count of hands.

The Popular Diet in Glarus was first mentioned in the year 1387. It was regarded as sacred and anyone speaking of it without proper respect was liable to banishment and the confiscation of his property. All the men of the canton assemble in the centre of the little town, within the "Zaun" (fence); even the school-children have their privileged place at the foot of the Government Stand, so that from their earliest days they learn from the example of their elders, and are educated to the great idea of common responsibility towards the State.

The Appenzel Popular Diet, as a sovereign political institution, dates back to the days of the struggles for liberty at the beginning of the 15th century. It is mentioned in the year 1403, when the army of the Abbot of St. Gall was beaten at the Speicher. In 1597, religious differences led to the division into the two half-cantons of Inner and Outer Rhoden. On the appointed day, the picturesque squares in Appenzell, Trogen or Hundwil are filled with thousands of citizens, each carrying a rapier or sword in his hand as a symbol of liberty. The roll of drums, the music of pipes, marches and the Song of the Popular Diet rise up to the spring sky and give the ceremony a fitting consecration.

The Popular Diets of the three original cantons very probably became political institutions in the year 1309, after the confirmation of the liberty of these cantons by the Emperor. Schwyz retained her Popular Diet till 1848, Uri till 1928. Since 1398, the Nidwalden Popular Diet has been traditionally held in the walled-in ring in Wil on the Aa. That of Obwalden was transferred in 1621 from the "Grund" in Sarnen to the Landenberg, where once the castle of the tyrants stood. The ecclesiastical dignitaries who take part in the procession open the ceremony by celebrating mass, to commend the Diet to the Almighty's protection. The Usher carries the Sword of Justice in his right hand. In Obwalden, the old signals are still given on the horn. In Nidwalden, the banners once captured from the enemy are hoisted over the heads of the assembly.

Human and divine rule still dominate in equal parts the ideas of the inhabitants of those valleys, who preserve the old forms of democracy unchanged, and every year proclaim at the Popular Diets the profound significance of Swiss freedom.
