Helicopters with detachable baskets holding guides and dogs, are to be used in Switzerland for mountain rescue work.

The Matterhorn peak is now safe from mechanization. The Swiss Federal Government has granted the commune of Zermatt the desired concession to build a cable railway from Zermatt (5,315ft.) to Schwarzsee (8,495ft.), but has made it clear that the cable railway could in no case be regarded as the first stage of a line that might sooner or later be extended either towards the Matterhorn or towards the Furggengrat (the arrival point of a cable railway from Breuil).

The Government's decision endorses an earlier decision by the commune of Zermatt. It also gives satisfaction to 95,000 petitioners in many countries and to more than 40 alpine associations which, under the leadership of the International Union, have for two years been strenuously opposing the Matterhorn cable railway scheme originated by some Italian business men. Furthermore, the Italian Government has recently made use of existing legislation for the protection of nature to put an end to the scheme.

It is stated that the Zermatt-Schwarzsee cable railway will leave undamaged the forest extending above Zermatt, and will hardly be seen from the village. The middle station, "Furi" will therefore be the starting point of many summer excursions, and in winter several ski runs will diverge from it over the northern and eastern slopes of the Matterhorn group.

Switzerland's winter sports season has opened with the first of many important skiing competitions. During the season no fewer than 342 competitions, of which 30 are international events, are being organised. 112 are of national or regional importance and 182 are mainly of local interest. No single region has been forgotten in the allocation of the different events. Ice hockey fans have also much to interest them. A great rivalry is evident among all the regions of the country and the first championship matches point to a close struggle. But the ice rinks, whether natural or artificial, are not comandered solely by ice hockey players. Skating enthusiasts can use them as they like or just watch the experts either giving demonstrations or taking part in their own competitions. Curling, itself a sport which has many admirers and which demands a fair degree of concentration and skill, will be the subject of matches in several of the resorts. The bobsleigh has numerous exponents in the country, and the bolidés are attracting many spectators, particularly at St. Moritz and Les Avants, above Montreux.

The Swiss mountain resorts have done much to build up the popularity of winter holidays. There are attractions to suit all tastes, ages — and purses.

It was on April 15th, 1803, that the deputies of the two regions of Switzerland that came under the Abbey of St. Gallen and those of several old Confederate bailiwicks proclaimed the foundation of a new Swiss Canton — that of St. Gallen.

On April 15th this year the present cantonal Parliament meets in solemn session to commemorate this historic date. But it will be several months later — on either Saturday, August 22nd, or 29th, before the long-awaited 150th anniversary celebrations will take place. The fine medieval "Klosterplatz", which is dominated by the abbey church and is classed as one of the most beautiful in Switzerland, will be the scene of a specially written festival play with words by the poet Georg Thürer and music by Paul Huber. There will be speeches by the Landammann (the president of the cantonal government) and the President of the Swiss Confederation.

In the afternoon a colourful carnival procession will wind through the streets of the old town, and in the evening there will be popular festivals in the parks, the squares and the public buildings of the city that is known throughout the world for its textiles and embroideries. All parishes in the canton will celebrate special religious services on either Sunday, August 23rd, or 30th, and these will be followed by civic celebrations.

"WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE IN SWITZERLAND"

Both here, and abroad, it has often been observed that although Switzerland is unquestionably the oldest democracy in the world, and one that has developed to its extreme limits the system of government by the people, she is at the same time of the last of the civilised States to refuse votes to women.

This brief recapitulation of the situation is perfectly exact. It should be remarked, however, that in all those countries where women's suffrage has been introduced, this has been done by an act of Parliament or by the Government and that, nowhere, have the men been consulted. In our country, however, no reform of any kind whatsoever can be undertaken without the electoral body, that is to say the entire body of adult males, being under the obligation of expressing their opinion on the matter. And that, no doubt, forms a serious obstacle to an innovation which comes within the logical order of things and of general evolution. This obstacle has not been met with elsewhere. There is nothing to tell us as to whether men, in other countries, if they had been consulted by means of a popular referendum would have shown themselves willing to share with women those rights of which they are the sole possessors, up to the present.

The fact must be faced also that, if men were not consulted in other countries regarding the institution of women's suffrage neither have the women been asked, up to now, to declare officially as to whether they desired to enjoy civic rights. Rights were allocated to them, regarding which it was not known, as the result of an incontrovertible test, whether or not they really wanted them.

Now, however, such a test has just taken place. And, this, in Switzerland, in Geneva, to be more exact. After several negative votes on this subject had been registered during the last few years, in various of the Cantons, the Genevese decided to settle the matter, one way or another. They argued as follows: "It is often said by those who are against women's votes, that the women themselves have no wish to enjoy this right. We will consult them regarding this. Before giving them the vote, we want to know what is their opinion on this subject." And that is how it came to pass that recently, all the women of Swiss nationality domiciled in Geneva, took part in a kind of plebiscite, which proved to be a most interesting consultation.

We are now in the possession of the results of this extremely original consultation. The women who participated in the voting showed in a very definite manner that they were in favour of the extension of civic rights to women who had attained their majority. This opinion was expressed by six to one votes. The result is therefore quite clear and definite, if one considers that it will no longer be possible to pretend that women are not interested in an eventual active participation in public affairs.

There is, however, a shadow cast on this picture by the fact that more than 40% of the women kept away from this consultation and refrained from expressing any opinion. They just stayed at home. They did not want to be bothered. If they proved anything, it was their thorough lack of interest. And, this aspect of the consultation must also be borne in mind, quite impartially.

Indeed, by reason of these far too numerous abstentions, it is only a little less than half the women who have demanded in a clear and unequivocal manner the granting to them of civic rights. All the others — that is to say, rather more than half — have refused the present which was offered to them, or else have confessed to having no opinion at all, on the matter. If one takes this into account, then the consultation held in Geneva, loses some of the precise clearness which it appeared to possess at first glance.

This means that plenty of water will flow under our bridges before feminine suffrage is established in Switzerland. But, this is merely a question of time.
