The elections for the two Chambers of the Swiss Parliament (States and National Council) have taken place on Sunday, October 30th.

The first Chamber or Council of States, pending a second ballot for two seats, so far includes 37 members of the bourgeois parties and two Socialists. The second Chamber will be formed of 53 Socialists, 50 Radicals, 47 Catholic Conservatives, 22 members of the Peasant party, 20 members of other bourgeois parties, and four Communists. Thus the Socialist Party, with a gain of four seats, becomes the strongest single party in Parliament, while the Communists lose one seat and the Radical Party, which is a Government party, loses one seat.
