It is not a hotel, because it is not run for profit. It is not charity because the visitor is expected to pay for the cost of his keep, say five francs a day, and lend a helping hand here and there in the house or garden or in hay-making or bringing in other crops, etc. He can choose to do what he likes best, and how much of it, or nothing at all if he does not feel like it or is not well. Nobody will mind so long as the sense of a peaceful friendly community is not disturbed. The meals are simple, but excellently cooked by a professional chef. They are served up by visitors in turn.

There is a comfortable lounge with radio and TV, various other common rooms and a play-room for children. There are single and double bedrooms and some dormitories for over-spills. But, most important, there is a large farm with out-buildings, domestic animals of all sorts, fields and woods where visitors may try their hand at whatever tickles their fancy. They are made welcome everywhere. You feel quite at home, or rather as if you were your uncle's favourite guest down on the farm. The fact that it costs so little is purely incidental, however welcome to most of us with families of a respectable size. The atmosphere and spirit of friendliness are "unpayable", the little work you are allowed to do at your choice can only be a pleasure, as it was when you first could help Mum making jam or assist aunty in the garden or proudly loaded uncle's cart with hay. Dürrenäsch is unforgettable to all its visitors. If you wish to go there, write early to the "Home", Dürrenäsch, Ct. Aargau, as the summer months are of course particularly favoured by most visitors, though all other seasons can be equally delightful.
