SWISSAIR CONFIRMS ORDER FOR TWO BOEING 747s

Swissair has now placed a firm order for two Boeing 747 high capacity jets for delivery in the first half of 1971. This follows negotiations with the Boeing Company which were opened early this year; the intention of buying aircraft of this type was originally announced at the airline's annual general meeting in April. The aircraft will be operated between Switzerland and New York.

In the Swissair configuration the Boeing 747 will have a crew of nineteen and transport 353 passengers including thirty-two in first class, plus 22,000 lbs. of cargo, at a cruising speed of 495 knots.

Operating these high capacity jets it will be possible to cope with growing passenger and cargo traffic with a relatively small increase in aircraft movements and thus ease the situation at airports. The Boeing 747's Pratt & Whitney JT9D-3 fan engines are expected to produce less noise than existing engines, due to new construction principles and despite greater performance.

FURTHER ADDITIONS TO SWISSAIR FLEET

On January 3rd, 1968 Swissair received its second ultra long-range Douglas DC-8-62 (14 first class and 141 economy class seats). The 9,800 km. delivery flight from Long Beach, California, to Zurich was made non-stop in 10 hours 40 minutes. The new aircraft, HB-IDF, is expected to join the first DC-8-62, HB-IDE, on North Atlantic services from mid-February.

Both replace on this route Swissair's smaller straight jet DC-8-33s; the first of these, MB-IDC, was delivered to the German charter operator "Suedflug" just before Christmas and the second, HB-IDA, is due to leave Swissair in the spring.

The names of Swissair's first two DC-8-62s have been revised: the latest arrival, HB-IDF, is now named "Zurich" while HB-IDE, delivered last November, is called "Genève".

Swissair has also taken delivery of its seventh Douglas DC-9 twin jet, HB-IFG "Valais". The aircraft is the airline's second 87-seat DC-9-32, the other five DC-9s being the smaller series 15. Five more DC-9-32s are due to be received this year and three in 1969. The original five DC-9-15s are on lease and will be replaced this year by five DC-9-32s with which SAS is temporarily equipping at present.

The latest DC-9-32, HB-IFG, will go into service in Europe from the end of March. Before then it will be used for crew training; for this purpose the aircraft will be stationed in Vienna and Bratislava (Czechoslovakia) where Swissair has for some time been carrying out flight training as a contribution to noise reduction in the area of Zurich Airport.

SWISSAIR AGAIN TO SERVE SAO PAULO

After an interval of six years, Swissair now again includes Sao Paulo, Brazil, on its South America route. Two services weekly call at Sao Paulo South-bound, and one weekly North-bound.

From 7th March 1968, Swissair will operate new ultra long-range Douglas DC-8-62 jets on the South America services, seating fourteen first and 141 economy class passengers. The aircraft will replace Convair 990 Coronado jets, serving the route at present and seating 100 passengers.
