And finally...

Bryan Stone recalls ten years as Swiss News Editor

It started by accident. My background was Longmoor Military Railway and BR (Eastern), until I was appointed in January 1969 to work in Basel for Intercontainer, the European railways' new container operation. I had discovered Swiss railways already in the 1950s, on family holidays. Now, I could work on rail freight, (also all over the world, although Intercontainer was wound up after 25 years), care for a family, and for 50 years and more, enjoy Swiss trains. Shortly after my first wife died, the Verkehrshaus, of which I am still a Patron, invited me to lead a study group to York, to the National Railway Museum. There the Swiss Railways Society was part of the welcome. I offered my help to the SRS. The result was some forty or more 'Swiss News' and at least as many articles, via my mentor and friend Malcolm Bulpitt. Now, a long-retired Swiss citizen, in my village near Basel, I have to stop. Stop? Well, not quite. The fascination, the passion for history, for technical and social issues is as real as ever. My library supports failing memory. An occasional article is not excluded. But I will escape the deadlines.

It has been a particular pleasure to serve the Society and the many devoted and well-informed members, longstanding and new. Their love of Swiss railways is much more than engines or viaducts. It is almost always combined with love of Switzerland, its scenery of course, but also its ways, institutions and background. My contributions raised many echoes (mostly encouraging). Our ideals met, for this is my life, and it is, of course, why my railways are what they are. Societies do not stand still; members will always bring new interests. At 80 years old, I cannot always be out and about, and many friends have already gone before. If, as it will, the SRS is to flourish in future, it will encourage new insights, new friendships and new perspectives, which build on our past efforts. Malcolm Bulpitt has brought the journal to a high standard; the challenge is to keep it up. But you will; and the railways of Switzerland will still justify many a long hour on country stations and at busy junctions. I thank you all for your loyalty. ☒
