- P.103 POSTMODERN UNCANNY: FEAR AS A CRITICAL TOOL
Chiara Salmini
(1) A number of authors after Freud have explored the implications of the unhomely, notably Heidegger, Benjamin, Lacan, Derrida, Cixous. The latter in Fiction and Its Phantoms: A Reading of Freud's Das Unheimliche, 1976, brilliantly entertains an intertextual dialogue with Freud, finding in his argumentation's structure the very origin of his double, 'Hesitation': the text itself is uncanny, it leaves the reader in doubt whether any truth about the topic can be found. The supposedly scientific approach (starting with etymology) is ridiculed by the truly ungraspable nature of the Unheimliche.
(2) Ernst Jentsch, Zur Psychologie des Unheimlichen, 1906.
(3) Another elusive concept found in literature, worth mentioning through a reference to the last writing of Mark Fisher, The Weird and the Eerie, (London: Repeater Books, 2016), pp. 58–128.
(4) See Freud, Das Unheimliche (1919) for an extended exploration on the uncanny in literature.
(5) This suggestion is borrowed from Anthony Vidler's extended analysis on the implications of the Uncanny in architecture. Anthony Vidler, The Architectural Uncanny: Essays in the Modern Unhomely (Cambridge, Massachusetts: MIT Press, 1992), pp. 7–9.
(6) Edmund Burke, «Obscurity», in: A Philosophical Enquiry into the Origin of our Ideas of the Sublime and Beautiful, (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2014), pp. 99–101.
(7) Again, we quote here Strathausen, Uncanny Spaces: «A fear tormented the last half of the eighteenth century,» said Michel Foucault during one of his interviews «the fear of dark spaces, the blanket of darkness that prevents the full visibility of things, men and truths.» Foucault's phrase is reminiscent of Max Horkheimer and Theodor Adorno's earlier definitions of the Enlightenment as a «mythical fear that has become radical», a fear that they conceptualized in spatial terms. «Nothing must remain outside, because the very idea of an 'outside' is the true source of fear.»

(9) Richard Martin, The Architecture of David Lynch, (London: Bloomsbury, 2015), p. 104.
(10) Linda Bradley Salamon, «Looking for Richard» in History: Post-modern villainy in Richard III and Scarface, Journal of Popular-Film & Television 28 (August 2000), p. 54.
(11) Frank's office showcases an ostentatious sculptural piece of thorn metal which seems to prelude to his own destruction.
(12) Anthony Vidler, Architectural Uncanny (see note 5), p. 11.
(13) To quote Foucault, the ideals of Enlightenment - a «mythical fear radicalized» (Adorno and Horkheimer) - were materialized in architecture as a literal and metaphorical fear of dark spaces, giving ground to the conceptualization of transparency and «whiteness» in modernist architecture.
(14) The architecture portrayed in the first pool scene belongs to the Fontainebleau Resort in Miami Beach, a 1954 building designed by Morris Lapidus, considered a predecessor of the postmodern style. The Stairway to Nowhere is famous in another architecture of his, the Nautilus Club: behind the orchestra was located a curved, scenic staircase, which served as a theatrical stage for patrons. At the top there was no destination: just a wardrobe.
(15) Mark Fisher, The Weird and the Eerie (London: Repeater Books, 2016), p. 112.

Julius Grambow
(1) For a brief introduction, see: McKenzie Wark: Cognitive Capitalism. Public Seminar February 19th 2015, <https://publicseminar.org/2015/02/cog-cap/>, accessed: 11 Aug. 2020.
(2) «The fundamental level of ideology is not of an illusion masking the real state of things but that of an (unconscious) fantasy structuring our social reality itself. And at this level, we are of course far from being a post-ideological society. Cynical distance is just one way – one of many ways – to blind ourselves to the structuring power of ideological fantasy: even if we do not take things seriously, even if we keep an ironic distance, we are still doing them.» Slavoj Žižek, The Sublime Object of Ideology (New York: Verso, 1989), p. 33.
(3) This can also be replaced by Limmat-; Rhine-; Thames- or Spree-ascetics. Some big streams seem to resemble the international flow of capital in real estate explicitly well.
(4) In an interview on Spotify, which has unfortunately been deleted, the former OMA-partner Ippolito Pestellini described how the company explicitly has designed a building 'to look good on Instagram'. Consequently, as to underline the transdisciplinary role of the architect in a fluid network of actants, he prefers to call himself a «spatial practitioner».
