Tissus fins de haute qualité, mercerisés et irrétrécissables, pour chemises de sport, de ville et du soir avec des dessins jacquard, plis tissés et effets de fils Lurex

Fine high quality mercerised and shrink-resistant fabrics for sports, town and evening shirts, with jacquard designs, woven tucks and Lurex thread effects

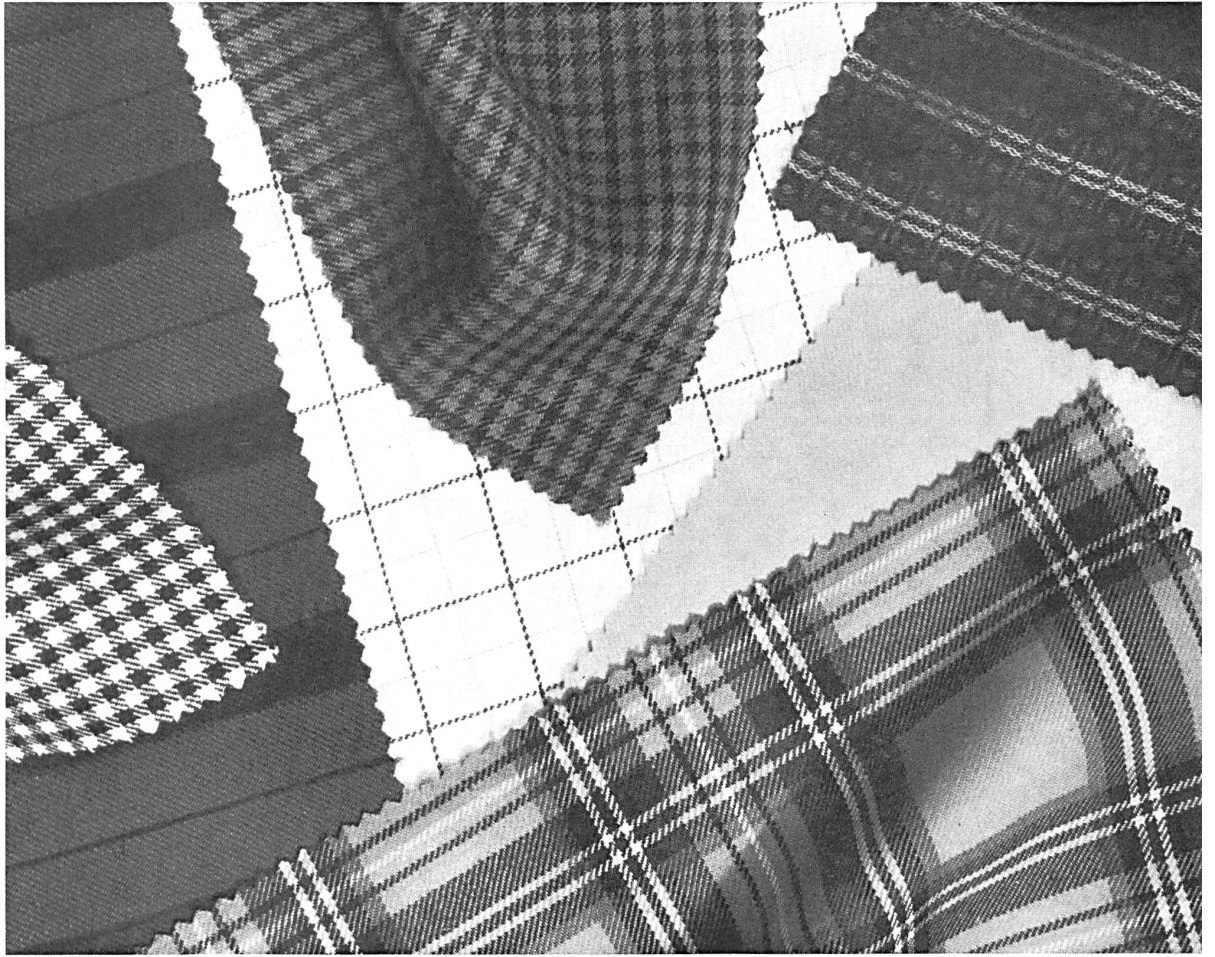

Tejidos finos de alta calidad, mercerizados e inencogibles, para camisas de deporte, de calle y de gala con dibujos jacquard, pliegues y efectos de hilos Lurex

Hochqualitative Baumwoll-Feingewebe mercerisiert und nicht eingehend für Sport-, Stadt-, und Galahemden mit Jacquardmustern, eingewobenen Plisse und Lurexeffekten

In order to discover the latest trends in men's shirts, we carried out an enquiry on three distinct levels, i.e. among shirting manufacturers, makers-up and retailers.

According to the latter, the white shirt continues to be the most popular for day wear in town and accounts for about 75 to 90 % of sales. But the day shirt in pastel shades in plain or pin-striped poplin is slowly coming back into favour as well as other stripes of all widths, and checks. For white shirts, cotton, with its new easy-care qualities, is fast winning back some of the ground it lost to synthetics. For leisure and sports wear, the trend is still very definitely towards dark and muted shades; together with browns, bronzes, coppers and reds, the most popular colours are black and white, petroleum and grey.

Among makers-up the reply was somewhat different. For the day, they are trying to promote a return to the old classical designs (clip-cord, pin-stripes, fine or broad stripes, small checks) already favoured by the customer, and they predict a falling off — though very slight — in white. The fashion for sports and leisure shirts is growing rapidly; in this sector, there is a falling off in the rather flashy brightly coloured type of shirt. Let us also mention the trend towards sports shirts suitable for year-round wear. These all-season shirts are made in fine Oxford or medium-weight poplin. For gala evenings, white shirts are once again plain, while evening shirts have fine tucked fronts. Smart day shirts or shirts for receptions are made with dobby loom or Jacquard effects.

Shirting manufacturers still produce about 80 % of their output in white, the remainder being beige, sky-blue and light greys. Poplin remains a firm favourite and is made in very fine qualities; cotton voiles are also manufactured, as well as slightly shiny damasks with Jacquard and gauze effects. There is a revival of interest in cottons, but in the easy-care qualities, in both fine and broad stripes. In the pastel shades, tussore beige is expected to be the big new favourite. For leisure and sport, dark and muted shades are coming to the fore; let us mention too the continual search for new weave effects, particularly for creating porous fabrics.

The trend that is making men more and more aware of changing fashions has turned men's handkerchiefs from the strictly utilitarian objects they were into accessories

a coloured frame in the darker shades. Let us also mention the white clip-cord effects, which have become increasingly popular in the field of men's handkerchiefs subjected if not exactly to the whims of fashion, at least to a certain evolution on the artistic level. White remains classical, but when it is not simply framed with satin stripes or Jacquard effects, it may be decorated with in recent years. But now printed designs, reserved only a short while ago strictly for women's and children's handkerchiefs, are now being adopted for men, the designs of course being essentially masculine in tone and character.

Her central position, at the crossroads of various international influences, and her reputation as a country of tourism have enabled Switzerland to make a name for herself in the field of men's ready-to-wear clothing in the «European» style. This well-planned branch benefits from the close contacts maintained between clothing manufacturers on the one hand and the retail trade and fabric manufacturers on the other. Men's ready-to-wear clothing of Swiss make is noted for its particularly fine workmanship, its selection of international-type fabrics and a cut that is typically masculine without being too rugged. For the winter 1963/64, the line remains slender with shoulders a shade more square and lapels a little longer. The waist tends to be slightly more marked. For town wear, the emphasis is on single-breasted coats with two or three buttons, worn over a waistcoat of the same material as the suit. For more dressy occasions, the double-breasted suit seems to be regaining a little favour with a more slender line, obtained by a smaller overlap and buttons placed closer together widthwise. Sportscoats remain loose and only very slightly marked at the waist. As for trousers, they are a shade narrower and hang vertical from the knee; they are usually made without turn-ups. Among the overcoats, in addition to the traditional smart models, there are many rather more casual articles, with raglan sleeves, belted or with half-belts trimmed with stitching, while the fashion for the short coat, for motoring and sport, continues unabated, with fur or knitted collars.

The general rise in the standard of living, both at home and abroad, and a certain change in consumer trends in the field of clothing, have led to increased interest in fashion among men too, resulting in its turn in a more deliberate search for new textures and new colours for town wear.

The same influences and the shorter working hours have had far-reaching repercussions on living habits and with them consumer habits. These changes have led to an increase in the importance attached to leisure and particularly to life in the open air and sport, resulting in its turn in the creation of a huge world market for a special category of clothing to be worn after working hours. Switzerland is well placed for making a big contribution to international fashions in this field. This special branch of the clothing industry is required to supply articles that are resistant to strains and stresses, bad weather and hard wear, and that are at the same time easy to look after, comfortable to wear, masculine in appearance and always neat and smart. But today these articles are also expected to comply with the latest requirements of fashion, an international fashion that the development of the audio-visual mass media has made it possible to spread throughout the world in a minimum of time. Furthermore, Switzerland's highly diversified production is in the hands of medium-size specialized concerns which can adapt themselves very quickly to changing fashion trends. The type of production can be qualified as individual and is easily adapted to the particular tastes of the consumer country. Shirts in printed or colour-woven crease-resistant fabrics, in fast colours and modern styles, shirts to be worn outside trousers, sportsjackets, rainproof coats and jackets, trousers, shorts, beach outfits and swimming trunks, leather coats and jackets, with or without collars and knitted trimming, knitted jackets combined with leather, all these are but a few of the many articles that Swiss sports and leisure wear manufacturers place on the market in impeccable quality.
