THE FALL COLLECTIONS:

EASY ELEGANCE

American fashions are at ease. Understated elegance and a sense of ease and informality add up to style this season. The men's wear influence is paramount. Hemlines end at midcalf. Greys and winter whites, brown, navy, wine and forest green, fawn and blush pastels alternate with black and day-glo brights. The easy good looks revolve around big overcoats and jackets, wide pants, jersey dresses and cashmere knits. Evening fashions take their cue from casual sportswear and are just as comfortable to wear.

The androgynous look

The overwhelming influence of men's wear is expressed in muted colorations and in the choice of fabrics: Tweeds, flannels, cavalry twills, loden cloth, haberdashery checks, herringbone and plaid-patterned woollens. It's a man's world on Seventh Avenue, though every designer has his or her own approach.

"Not fashion, just good clothes," says Calvin Klein of his urbane mix of boyish separates in tweeds and flannels, wool prints and cashmere sweaters. At Ralph Lauren, the super-refined country look includes demure schoolgirl dresses, WASPish cashmere coats with velvet collars, and genteel tweed jackets over sweeping velvet skirts. While Anne Klein offers well-groomed polo coats, riding pants and saddle skirts, Perry Ellis' mannish plaid balmacaan teams well with a handknit shetland vest, silk shirt and covert trousers.

Mixing patterns as well as textures — a muted tweed jacket and plaid wool shirt look perfectly at ease over a paisley printed wool challis skirt — sportswear designer clothes this Fall look refreshing and strictly All-American.

The grandly scaled toppers

Oversized overcoats with a built-in swagger, amply cut yet slim boy coats and trenches in tweeds and gabardine are the perfect toppers for casual sportswear separates and long-skirted jersey dresses. The important looks: Bill Blass's pale pink cashmere ulster over beige cashmere sweater and full pleated flannel pants. Calvin Klein's barleycorn tweed balmacaan and covert plaid blazer with cashmere sweater and cavalry twill trousers. The broad-shouldered polo coats in solid navy, russet and burgundy alpaca and wool broadcloth at Anne Klein and Ralph Lauren. And last but not least, Oscar de la Renta's free-swinging cropped coats in neon-brights over black and day-glo jersey dresses.

Knits take a frontline bow. As the day declines, the ivory varsity sweaters, the colorful argyles, the handknit shetlands and classically clean cashmeres make way for jeweled Icelandic ski sweaters at Bob Mackie, for Oscar de la Renta's white cashmere cardigan edged in black velvet, and for one of this season's greatest looks: the quartet of silver grey, golden camel, pale pink and deep red long cashmere sweaters and twin-sets over deep-flounced skirts of satin and lace that stopped the show at Bill Blass.

The ever-essential glitz

In their pursuit of offhand elegance, America's top designers leave nothing to chance. Evening separates offer plenty of glitter, yet are as comfortable to wear as casual sportswear. If de la Renta goes on the gold standard with gold lamé and jewel-encrusted gold guipure lace combined with black velvet, Blass pairs off a sable-cuffed cardigan jacket paved in gold beads with cashmere trousers.

Those who favor more traditional evening clothes find plenty of sleek and seductive creations, bare-shouldered, with portrait neckline, wrapped torso and empire waistline. They come in a panoply of silky panné velvet, sensuous silk satins, rich silk jacquards, fluid crêpes, shimmering lamés and embroidered organzas from Switzerland's leading fabric and embroidery houses.

THE GOOD WOOLS

Daytime chic in soft grey and beige. But bright blue is striking with black.

Carolina Herrera loves shoulder accents. Her grey flannel dress has velvet leaf appliqué by Forster Willi. She combines Abraham's African-inspired wool challis with a color-matched sweater.

Adele Simpson cuts an elegant suit in pure new wool flannel from Bleiche. The accompanying blouse is a silk print from Weisbrod-Zurrer. Dresses are draped. In solid-colored wool flannel from Bleiche or jewel-toned silk satin from Abraham.

Two-tone effects and masterful draping also at Marc Bouwer. In matte jersey from Abraham. A new talent in American fashion, the young South African's designs have simplicity of cut and fluidity of line.

DRAMATICAL DRAPING

Le Rouge et le Noir. Simple, sumptuous, sensuous. Body-sculptured, body-skimming.

Abraham's double-faced silk satin, satin-back silk crêpe and flowered silk jacquard make an entrance.

Moulded torso, sweetheart neckline: Bill Blass. Gently gathered, in vibrant color mixes: Oscar de la Renta.

The sleek slashed siren features Bob Mackie's native-inspired signature beading on solid-colored crêpe from Schwarzenbach.

Schlaepfer's red allover embroidery on black velvet ground shows up at Adele Simpson. Seductively low cut, with tiered skirt.

THE PURE-BRED

Purity of color, purity of line. Black played against white. A classical formula in elegant evening dressing.

George Stavropoulos accents the hip. His long blouson of white embroidered silk organza from Naef tops a white wrapped sheath.

The hip-hugging, godet-pleated gown in black crêpe from Schwarzenbach gets a glittering hand-beading treatment at Bob Mackie.

Also among this season's greatest looks: Oscar de la Renta's two-piece cocktail suit in black and white grosgrain. His high-waisted silk organza wrapper with portrait neckline. The empire gown designed by Bill Blass in satin-back silk crêpe with appliquéd motifs. All in fabrics from Abraham.

EXQUISITE EMBROIDERY

Richesse of material, richesse of decor. After five, fashion focus is on embroideries.

Richilene accentuates a slim waist, a graceful hemline. The bare-shouldered burgundy gown has a rich decor of multicolor border embroidery on pure silk satin, the short ivory dress lurex border embroidery on dot-figured iridescent crêpe ground. Both from Jacob Rohner.

The teal blue panné velvet dress by Diane Dickinson for Gentillesse features cut-out organza motifs incrustated with sparkling rhinestones. Evening elegance from Oscar de la Renta combines black velvet with Forster Willi's jewel-incrusted gold guipure lace.

OUR MEN IN NEW YORK

Although Switzerland is always worth a trip, you need not travel there to see this country's textile products. For many years, Swiss mills and embroidery houses have been maintaining showrooms in New York as well as in other major American cities. They are run by efficient agents who know the textile business intimately; who understand your problems and strive to give you individual on-the-spot service.

Acting as ambassadors of the Swiss textile industry, these manufacturers' representatives take pride in bringing the best Switzerland has to offer to the American apparel industry and retail piece goods trade. They are knowledgeable about fabrics and well informed on international fashion trends. They will relieve you of time-consuming import operations and, thanks to bulk shipments, often at rates quite advantageous to you.

Just in case you have not yet met, Textiles Suisses takes pleasure in introducing our men – and ladies – in New York:

THE HUES OF FALL

Muted shades of russet, purple and leafy greens. Fall's fashion hues add tone to easy daytime wear.

Helga likes ensemble dressing in oversized checks and stripes. The cinnamon dress is a wool challis print from Abraham, the grey and moss pleated skirt and matching shawl a color-weave from Mettler.

Tica separates come together in printed wool challis and toned-down multicolorations by Mettler.

At UMI Collections a matching sweater echoes design and colors of the Fisba cotton print skirt. Another Fisba print in glowing shades of purple on wool challis inspires designer Diane Dickinson for Gentillesse.

SPECIAL OCCASION

A touch of glamour, a hint of lace. Seventh Avenue dresses for a memorable evening. Carol Peretz is in a romantic mood. The pale mauve dress with lace trim is a pure silk jacquard from Schubiger. The ivory dress has a top layer of embroidered cotton tulle with guipure appliqués from Forster Willi.

Dropped waistlines and swirling skirts are fashion news at Annemarie Gardin. The pleated dress is a multicolored hand-print on satin-striped silk from Riba, the flounces on the black dress a silk organza from Stünzi.

George Samen at Mollie Parnis sculpts a short evening column with tulip sleeves in Schubiger's gold lamé cloqué. The long empire gown at Helga's shows to advantage the shimmering magenta print from Gut.
